CHAMBERLIN IN CRASH; INJURY IS ONLY SLIGHT

Plane Wrecked When It Hits Ditch On Take-Off Today

RUNWAY TOO SHORT

Plane Was Heavily Loaded And Could Not Get Momentum

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 4 (I.N.S.)—Clarence Chamberlin, the trans-Atlantic flier, was slightly injured and his Martine-Bellanca plane was wrecked on the take-off of a flight to establish a new endurance record here early today.

The big ship crashed into a ditch from a height of 50 feet.

Chamberlin's injury consisted of bruises and a burned hand. His co-pilot, Roger O. Williams, emerged with scratches.

Lack of a runway long enough for the heavily loaded plane to acquire the momentum necessary to take it high into the air was said to be the cause of the accident.

Chamberlin and Williams were out to break the American endurance record of 52 hours, 22 minutes and 31 seconds.

Both were confident as they hopped into the plane and started off at 7.01 a. m. The plane started down the runway slowly, but gathering speed rapidly.

As Chamberlin neared the end of the prepared runway he "gave her the gas" and the ship rose into the air. Struggling under the heavy load of gasoline, the plane rose slowly and as it reached a height of about fifty feet, seemed to hover there.

Suddenly the ship seemed to flatten out and despite the frantic efforts of the famous pilot, it struck the ground heavily and then toppled over into a ditch.

Spectators rushed madly to the scene of the accident, only to find Chamberlin emerging from the cockpit with a smile. As he emerged he carried the barograph and other sealed instruments which were to record the new struggle for an endurance record. These he sought to save from a possible fire.

"Well, we'll try it again," remarked Chamberlin with a grin.

FIND AGED MAN DEAD AT CEMETERY ENTRANCE

Samuel Ridge, of Bensalem Township, Found by Grave Digger and Others

BEEN TO LANGHORNE

HULMEVILLE, Feb. 4.—Upon seeking for Samuel Ridge, 78, whose horse was apprehended enroute home without him, neighbors found the lifeless body of the man near the entrance to Beechwood Cemetery yesterday noon.

The man, who lived by himself in a house in Bensalem Township, had made a trip to Langhorne for a small load of coal, and was enroute home when it is presumed he fell over dead. It was later stated by those who had seen him as he commenced the trip up the hill just over the bridge that spans the Neshaminy, that he was walking by the vehicle.

The horse was stopped by William Dunford, who resides near the home of the victim. Mr. Ridge had for years followed farming.

Deputy Coroner Furman Young, of Bristol, was called and issued a permit stating that death was due to heart trouble.

William Dunford, who is employed as a grave digger at the Beechwood Cemetery; and Earl Phipps and Joseph P. Canby, told of the finding of the body, these men arriving at the scene at practically the same time.

The deceased is survived by one brother, Henry Ridge, of Wissinoming.

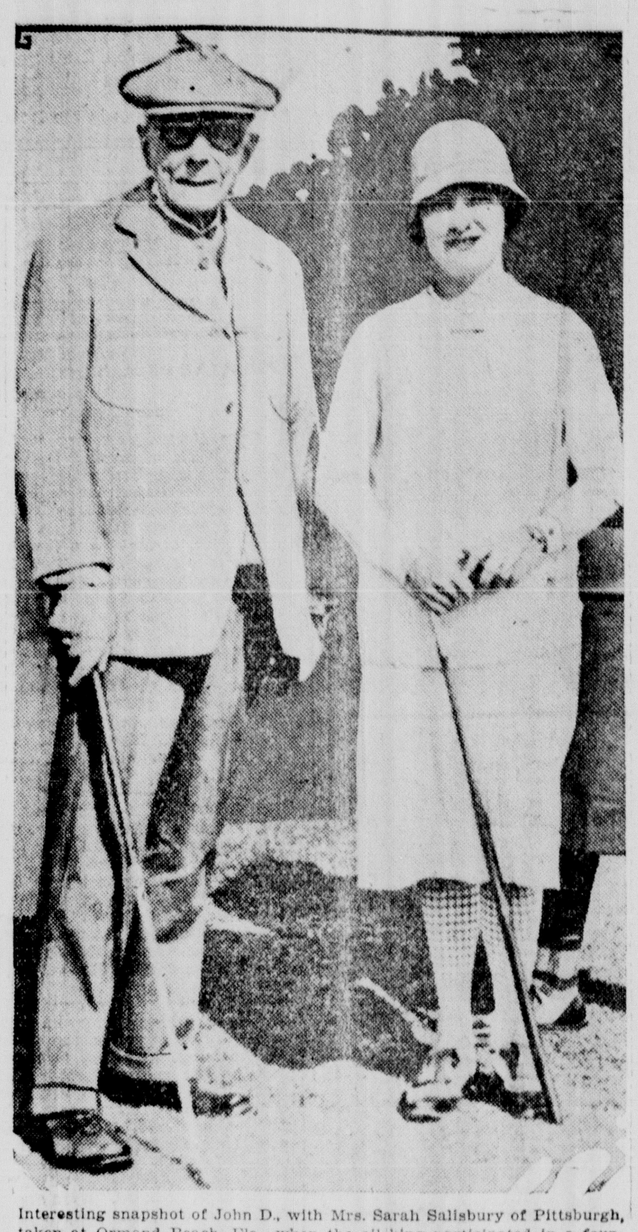

Funeral service will be held on Monday in the Beechwood Cemetery Chapel at 2 p. m., and burial will be made in said cemetery.

LANCASTER, Pa., Feb. 4.—Members of the graduating class at East End Junior High School purchased a clock which registers the exact time each student arrives at school in the morning.

They planned to present it to Principal William Sohl for the school, and designated one of their number to deliver a presentation address. At the critical moment the boy appointed failed to show up. He was tardy that day.

LAD, 13, FEARING WHIPPING, RUNS AWAY FROM HAZLETON; NOW HELD AT DOYLESTOWN

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 4.—Fearful that his mother would beat him up as she has on several occasions, Wallace Waselchok, aged 13, of 224 South Pine street, Hazelton, Pa., has been wandering about the country for three days and two nights on his way to Philadelphia in search of his Dad whom he says, loves him and treats him kindly.

Yesterday the Doylestown police took Wallace into custody after he had been turned over to them by E. O. Shaddinger, of near Plumsteadville. The little fellow applied at the Shaddinger place on Thursday night for lodging. He was cold and hungry and told Shaddinger that he had been working for a farmer nearby and had gotten lost after going to Pipersville for mail.

Arriving in town yesterday afternoon, Wallace told the police conflicting stories that carried them to various sections of Bucks county before the boy broke down, and with eyes filled with big tears, told them that he had run away from home last Tuesday afternoon while his mother was at work.

"She will give me a terrible beating if I have to go back to Hazelton," young Waselchok said yesterday while seated on a cot in his room in the House of Detention at the Bucks County Prison.

"I want to find my Dad," Wallace continued. "His name is Andrew Waselchok and he does not live with mother. They separated about two years ago after an argument over religion. Dad is a member of one religious faith and mother belongs to another. They were always fighting in the afternoon.

Mother gets drunk and beats me up. Tuesday morning my brother told me that mother was going to give me a beating that night so I slipped away inthe afternoon.

"I got a hop to Mauch Chunk in an automobile. Then I hiked it to Easton. Near there I got a job working for a farmer for a day and I left there. I then hiked it to near Plumsteadville, where I asked the man to let me sleep overnight.

"Oh, gee, mister, I wish you could find my Dad for me. He used to be a carpenter but I think he works in a factory in Frankford now. I am almost sure he lives in Frankford, but I do not know where. I think he worked near a medicine factory."

Wallace, a bright boy, was comfortably dressed yesterday. He is a student in a public school in Hazleton and said that he is in the seventh grade.

Police yesterday made an effort to get in touch with the boy's mother, Victoria Waselchok.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS DEFEAT MOUNT HOLLY

Local Quintet Gets Clean-Cut Victory Over N. J. Five

GIRLS LOSE THEIR GAME

By T. M. Juno

Successfully turning back a last quarter threat, Bristol High boys won a cleanly-fought game from its traditional rival from across the river, Mount Holly, yesterday. Final score was 26 to 20.

The fact that Referee Hopkins called fourteen fouls proves that the game was fast and not roughly played.

Bristol's five-man defense worked splendidly in the first three quarters of the game. Three times in as many periods were the Jerseyites able to break through the stellar defense of the Cardinal and Gray. But in the final period the defense cracked and Mount Holly set forth a great rally which totaled nine points, but the locals, realizing that defense was their main object again put up a fine defense which held the Jersey team until the final whistle blew.

Strumfels led the locals in scoring, sinking five baskets and two free shots for a total of twelve points. Captain Opdyke and De Risi played a good defensive game.

Parker, the Jersey team's forward, was the main cog in the visitors' attack. He was able to score four field goals and a gift shot for a total of nine points. It was the tenth victory out of eleven starts for the locals.

The Bristol High girls lost their second game of the season when they were handed their worst beating of the season from Mount Holly. Score was 24-16. The game was not as badly played as the score indicates, despite the fact that Bristol was defeated before they began to play.

Bristol staged a brilliant rally in the last stages of the game, but the Jersey team had too big of a lead to lose out. Bristol deserves much credit for their gameness in the battle as it was the hardest fought game for the Jersey team.

Durand and McFadden were the stars in the shooting ability of both teams. Both teams guards play very good.

MANUFACTURED ISSUES

So many "burning issues" loom and fade again, it is a wonder the public doesn't refuse to take them seriously. It requires no unusual powers of insight to discover that modern political issues, in the main, are manufactured for a purpose, not born. Issues that have disturbed the national equanimity in recent years have ranked not on their own merit but on the oratorical ability of politicians espousing them.

Some men are born great, some achieve greatness and others have greatness thrust upon them. Would that there were fewer issues with greatness undeservedly thrust upon them. Modern political strategy seems to impel the politician to scorn timber for real national issues while he manufactures an effigy of an issue from a curbstone argument.

These home-made issues never outlive their purpose, which usually has something to do with getting somebody into or out of office. After their work is done they are permitted to die a natural death. Even when based on economic or political foundations the conditions are seldom serious enough to assume the proportions of a national issue and their cure is only retarded by the undue emphasis placed on them.

Most of the issues now dividing congress will be as dead as free silver before the year dies. It was only a few months ago that the League of Nations, World Court, Muscle Shoals, ship subsidy, rubber monopoly, government management of railroads, war debt and soldiers' bonus issues were themes of heated debate. Now they are not even history.

LITERARY ADVANCEMENT

European writers visiting the United States are struck with the excellent standard of books that Americans generally seem to be reading. When the British find evidence of a trace of culture in America, natives need have no doubt that it exists.

These authors may be somewhat prejudiced because of the popularity their own works enjoy on this side of the Atlantic. But the fact remains that the publishing business in the United States was never more flourishing, nor literary output at higher level by critical standards, than is the case at present.

It has become quite commonplace for card parties to be prefaced, or even interrupted, by lively discussions of a bookish character. And social onus no longer rests on the "highbrow" who enjoys his reading, but rather on the person who used to claim with pride he had no time to waste on literary browsing.

Speculation on the causes of this change is interesting. National prosperity would not alone account for the qualitative as well as the quantitative improvement in reading. The growing demand for longer leisure periods, the spreading prejudice against the old idea that an American lives for routine work alone, are doubtless factors. But whatever the cause, an increased interest in ideas for themselves, regardless of their economic application, is now obvious. And when a democracy which has no narrow "reading class" takes up the art progress is rapid.

Who would have thought a quarter century ago that philosophy and biography would ever become popular mental diet for the average American.

Steady men are kept that way by bank balances.

The barber gave him hair tonic.

When the customer looked at his check, he asked: "What's the extra charge of a quarter for?"

The barber showed him the bottle of "Fine Weather Hair Tonic." And he could do nothing but laugh at his own expense.

FARM NOTES

Spread poultry or pigeon manure thinly over the garden if a supply is available.

Seed any bare spots in the lawn.

Get in the seed order early so you won't be disappointed.

Try a new sweet corn this year. There is a long list from which to choose.

Also try some of the novelties in peas. Some of the new low growing giant podded sorts will be revelations. Look over the garden tools some day when you haven't anything much to do. Sharpen them and grease them so they will ready for early use.

Start onion seed early if you want giant exhibition onions for the fall shows. The Bermuda types must be started early and transplanted.

Begin hunting for a supply of stable manure for the garden. It has come to a point where it is a matter of competition. Dairy farms are the best sources of supply near cities.

"BEWARE OF MARRIED MEN," starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a divorce lawyer to whom she is engaged, discovers that her younger sister, Helene, has become infatuated with Huntley Sheldon, a wealthy Don Juan whose wife, Nita, is making a fourth attempt to divorce him. Myra locks Helene in her room, disguises herself, and goes to Sheldon's hunting lodge to ask him to give up her sister. Sheldon, recognizing Myra, pretends a heart attack, forcing her to remain with him all night. Next morning Mrs. Sheldon arrives, but Myra escapes without being identified. Meantime, Helene elopes with Ralph Naylor. Myra, afraid to tell Leonard of her adventure, sounds him out.

For a moment Myra's heart stood still. Suppose Leonard ever found out about her escapade. She steadied herself against the side of the desk. "Who—who do you think's to blame in this case?" Actually she didn't want to discuss the matter, but she was irresistibly drawn towards the danger that seemed to threaten.

"O, I don't know for certain. I've never heard Evans' story in detail, at all. But certainly the woman who made off with him must have known that she was taking him away from another woman and breaking up what I suppose was a fairly happy sort of home. That's what I don't get. There are plenty of men in the world without going after one who's already taken."

"Perhaps, Leonard," Myra argued, "you're looking at these matters

"Suppose after we are married another woman comes along?"

from the wrong point of view. Suppose the 'other woman,' as you call her, happens to be in love with the man."

"Isn't his wife in love with him, too? Surely that counts for something. Suppose that after we are married, another woman comes along."

"Leonard! Please! Don't suggest such a thing. I couldn't stand it."

"Well, there you are. Other women feel that same way about it."

"I know. I didn't mean just exactly that. I was just thinking that often it wasn't the 'other woman' who started the affair. It might have been the man, you know. Perhaps you see only one side of the case. As a matter of fact you know as well as I do that a lot of the men who come in here to see about divorces are only too willing to flirt with me—invite me to dinner—start another affair all over again, before the last is even cold."

"Certainly, but you don't go out with them—at least I've never known you to. You see, it takes two to make a bargain. It's not so hard to discourage a man—if you really want to."

"That's perfectly true, but what about—about people like Huntley Sheldon, who is constantly running after any other woman than his wife?" The name had slipped out unconsciously. Myra would have given anything to have taken back her words, but she couldn't now, and the best thing to do was to continue. "He'd be a very hard person to discourage, I imagine, if he'd ever set his mind on any one. Of course, I suppose in his case he has a great many women interested in him. So he's not a very good example. But other men who have not his attractions—certainly they must do a large share of the running?"

"Yes, but you're getting away from the point of the argument," Leonard insisted. "As I said before, it takes two to make a bargain, and the 'other woman' is the other half of the bargain. If she weren't, we'd have fewer divorce cases, and I'd probably be a struggling young lawyer arguing corporation law." He laughed.

"Yes, but suppose the 'other woman' got mixed up quite by mistake—you know—didn't realize what was happening or know what she was doing?" Myra put the question timidly, but she felt that she had to find out—must find out—quickly.

"Blah!" Gilbert scoffed. "That's a lot of nonsense. No woman with any intelligence whatsoever could be made a fool of that way. Besides, there are enough corespondents' who, for a consideration, are willing to be known as 'Miss X' in the proceedings."

Myra's heart sank. Of course Leonard couldn't possibly understand. How wise she had been to decide not to mention anything to him. He wouldn't have believed her story, feeling as he did about these matters. He'd as much as said so then. But this was terrible, this weight that overpowered her, yet she must go on, talking, thinking, acting, shielding herself, making no false steps.

"But—but suppose I should get mixed up in something of that sort—would you blame me for taking the man in question away from his wife?"

Gilbert laughed. "That's really funny, Myra." He reached out his hand and caught hers. "No, I can never imagine you ever becoming involved in any such mix-ups. You're so entirely different from other women." He patted her hand tenderly.

Myra held on to the desk tightly until the knuckles of her hand looked white and knobby. Yes, that was just what she had expected of Leonard. He would feel that way about her. It would take much to make him believe anything against her, but if he were confronted with bare facts—and proof, then— She shivered slightly.

"What's the matter—cold?" Gilbert looked up at the girl beside him.

"Oh, no—no," Myra smiled, "but—"

The phone rang. Gilbert picked up the receiver and answered it. He waited for a moment. Then he turned to Myra.

"It's the New York call I've been expecting, dear. Will you see that I'm not disturbed?"

"All right." Myra fled back to her own office with a sense of relief. She sank weakly into her chair, and remained there, drumming on the desk with the tips of her fingers. Her hands were cold, and visibly trembling. What an awful morning. Was this sort of thing to go on for the rest of her life? Being haunted by strange fears, a prey to every small trend of conversation that had any bearing on the situation. Almost better to have the whole thing out and over with than to go about with a shadow dogging your footsteps.

She leaned forward, her chin cupped in her hands, her elbows resting on the desk. Once more she felt sick. That was all the sensation she seemed to have left, any more. Sickness from fright. Well, suppose she did have all this out with Leonard. No—no, she couldn't. She simply couldn't face it and risk losing his love and his admiration. He meant too much to her, was too closely identified with her life now for her to run the risk of losing him because of something that had, in a sense, no reality.

Why, oh, why had Helene been so foolish—so silly, and not listened to her. For a moment she could almost have hated her sister for bringing this upon her. But the mood passed quickly when she remembered, with shame, how she had herself been duped and tricked. But trick or no trick, she must try to keep her head about her, and not run into any more danger. Perhaps she was only working herself up to this pitch of fear. After all, was there any real danger if she stuck to her resolution, kept quiet, and said nothing more about Mr. Huntley Sheldon.

Of course, suppose his wife had found out who she was—her name. Perhaps that terrible detective person had found it out. Oh, but surely Sheldon wouldn't tell them, and there was no one else there who could possibly know. But suppose she some day met Mrs. Sheldon on the street. Suppose the woman should recognize her. Could she recognize her again? This was getting worse and worse. She was allowing herself to become almost hysterical. This would never do. She lectured herself severely, and told herself that she would probably never see Mrs. Sheldon again, and even if she did it would be some time later, and the woman would have completely forgotten that morning at the lodge. Now she felt a little calmer and persuaded herself that everything would come out all right.

As she turned to her desk and began to get out the papers for her morning's work, the door to her office opened. She looked up brightly, a cheerful "good morning" on her lips. Then her words fell dead; her eyes were staring, staring. She couldn't take them away from that door. For there, sweeping into the room, came Mrs. Nita Sheldon, followed by her faithful shadow, as red-faced and meek as ever, Botts.

Youths Blamed In Majority of Crimes

By International News Service

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 4.—The responsibility for the most serious crime problem in the United States today—the burglaries and robberies committed by youths under 23 years of age—is blamed on prohibition by Dr. Raymond Moley, research director of the New York State Crime Committee and consultant to the Illinois Association for Criminal Justice, who attended a three-day institute on the study of crime sponsored by the Women's Club here recently. Mr. Moley added that the enormous profits from bootlegging encourage organized crime.

"In a survey of 25,000 cases of burglaries and robberies, the majority had been committed by boys under 23," was Dr. Moley's startling assertion.

"It is almost impossible to give the reason for this low age. The minister says it is the lack of religion and the lawyers blame it on slow justice. I don't know what it is."

The New York criminologist outlined six popular misconceptions regarding crime as follows:

1. That juries are responsible for letting off criminals and that criminal trials by juries should be done away with;
2. That in determining sentences Judges are infallible;
3. That the best known cases are the most important;
4. That heavy sentences deter crime;
5. That probation is sentimental;
6. That an efficient administration of justice is impossible without paying for it.

Dr. Moley suggested that judges should try criminal cases alone. However, he added, they should not be given the sole right to determine the length of sentence.

A plan was advocated by Dr. Moley, whereby a person to be tried can decide whether he wants to be tried by a jury or by a lone judge.

He agreed with the opinion of Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York that sentences of criminals should be determined by psychiatrists or psychologists, assisted by investigators of the convicted persons.

"More and more cases are settled out of court in advance of the trial," Dr. Moley revealed. "More persons are pleading guilty. In New York City out of 5,600 indictments 64 per cent. pleaded guilty. In Cleveland the percentage was 64 per cent.; in St. Louis 58 per cent.; Minneapolis 81 per cent., and in Atlanta 43 per cent.

When the salaries of the prosecuting attorneys, judges and all connected with the administration of justice are increased at twice what they are at present, more efficient justice will be meted out, Dr. Moley contended.

"You cannot expect a $3,000 assistant prosecutor to win from a $50,000 attorney for the defense," he explains.

Keystone Five Wins From Morrisville Team

The Keystone basketball team continued its winning streak Thursday at the expense of the strong Morrisville P. A. A. team. The game was played at Beaver Hall and the final score was: Keystone, 53; Morrisville, 25.

The game was close for five minutes until "Butch" Debosky and "Syd" Trott started their usual heavy scoring, setting a pace which the Morrisville boys could not keep up to. Bud David, the fast little forward, also played a very fine game scoring six from all angles of the floor. Debosky had no trouble getting four, while he was in the game, while Trott dropped nine in from the floor. Carhart, Nelson and Garman performed best for the losers.

In the reserve game the Bristol Violets bumped the Keystone boys off in a hard fought game, 15-9.

State News

CENTRALIA, Pa., Feb. 4 (I.N.S.)—A committee of six persons, representing the miners, professional, business men and clergy are to call on President Humphreys of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, at Wilkes-Barre Feb. 6, to protest against the indefinite suspension of the Centralia mine of that company here.

Between 700 and 750 men have been thrown out of work by the suspension, which threatens to work considerable hardship here.

With other collieries in the region working only three or four days a week, the Centralia miners are unable to find work elsewhere. The Lehigh Valley president formerly was a mine superintendent in Centralia and it is hoped he may effect a plan whereby the local operation will work a few days a week.

Garden Hints

Seed catalogues are now in the hands of gardeners and a study of the new developments in vegetables for 1928 offers a distraction from the entertainment flowing in from all quarters by radio. The number of novelties and specialties shows a complete recovery from the wartime cessation in the development of new plants checked for several years as it requires five or six years to fix a new type of plant so that it may be depended upon to come true from seed.

There are new lima beans, new peas, new beets, new tomatoes, new sweet corn, in fact, a general development of vegetables all along the line, most of them in the way of improving existing strains in the way of earliness and increased bearing. Every gardener should try a few novelties in an effort to improve his garden. He should not depend entirely on new things as it is safest to depend upon varieties known to be reliable and successful in his section until the new things are tried out.

But something should be tried and if it proves better than the old-timers they should be supplanted.

The trying out of new plants is one of the most interesting phases of gardening both in the vegetable and flower garden. In the vegetable lines there isn't much in the way of new vegetables to be expected as the temperate zone has been thoroughly explored for its edibles for many years. The development is in the way of improving those that we already have and the progress has been remarkable.

It Never Sleeps

When you lock the doors of your store tonight, will your business remain at a standstill until you reopen your store tomorrow morning?

Your salesmen will go home for a night's rest. You will try to forget your business cares for a few hours.

There is no reason why you should not be storing up sales for tomorrow. Night doesn't bring stagnancy in the store whose owner advertises in the EVENING NEWSPAPER.

You can have an efficient personal representative at work for you while your store is closed. This representative works for you while you and your salesmen are asleep.

Locked doors at the store need not mean suspended activity on your part. The EVENING NEWSPAPER will find customers for you while your store is dark. Let the EVENING NEWSPAPER prevent people from forgetting you at night.

The Courier is an EVENING NEWSPAPER.
